A common misconception about Chinese characters is that they are pictures. I have met many people who don't study Chinese who think that the writing system works much like rebuses where pictures represent concepts and meaning is communicated by listing many such pictures next to each other.

Chinese Language Characters as Pictographs

In Chinese and Japanese, the surname comes before the first name. Chinese names are generally formed by 2 or maximum 3 characters; the Japanese instead can even go up to 4 characters (actually, it's a common practice). In both languages, titles and professions must follow the surname.

Look for Japanese characters in a piece of writing. While both Chinese and Japanese written languages use Chinese characters (known as hàn zì in Chinese and kanji in Japanese), Japanese also uses a phonetic script called hiragana. If you see hiragana characters in a piece of writing, you're looking at something Japanese.
