The Ruin Of Roman Empire

“James O’Donnell’s The Ruin of the Roman Empire: A New History takes as its centrepiece the period of Ostrogothic rule in sixth-century Italy. . . . [It is] revelatory: scholarly and original, unafraid to tackle profound issues of cultural and religious identity, and often hauntingly poetic.” (Times Literary Supplement (London))

"The Ruin" is an elegy in Old English, written by an unknown author probably in the 8th or 9th century, and published in the 10th century in the Exeter Book, a large collection of poems and riddles. The poem evokes the former glory of a ruined Roman city by juxtaposing the grand, lively past state with the decaying present.

Justinian, then, earned the villain role for O'Donnell, and is regarded in The Ruin of the Roman Empire as the proximate cause of the destruction of Roman civilization. Justinian stood accused of a building program and a war-fighting program which exhausted the realm's resources while winning for the realm a lot of basically unproductive territory (which was to be invaded thereafter by a new group of barbarians: the Lombards or Longobardii, who settled in Italy three years after ...

PUBLISHERS WEEKLY JUL 21, 2008 The Roman empire was not invaded by barbarians in the fifth century, says classical historian O'Donnell. Rather, these tribes Visigoths, Vandals and others were refugees who crossed into the empire in search of a place to settle. These migrants were turned into enemies by Rome.
